SEATING

Space Finds a Purpose Defined by Seating

To sit is to partake; it is to engage in something; it is to find meaning central to that which you now serve as foundation

The seating setup within a space is a key factor in determining the use of the space and how someone is expected to engage in the space.

An auditorium filled with rows of fold-down seats clearly differs from a room hosting a recliner.

Even in the abstract form, seating subconsciously evokes many moods & behaviours.

You could have a front-row seat or take a back seat; you could be sitting pretty or a sitting duck; you could be in the hot seat & being kept on the edge of your seat.

The need for different seating to serve different purposes is evident, and we hope that the range of chairs we have on offer helps you to define your space.
